Do you or someone you know need help to deal with the Children’s Aid Society in Ontario?

Get Informed!
Every year in Ontario thousands of children and families are adversely affected by the actions of the Province’s privately owned and operated children’s aid agencies (CAS) in Ontario.

While there are a number of good workers out there trying to do a good job to help protect children, unfortunately, too many workers lack the necessary training and experience and as a result cause untold misery to children and families in communities across Ontario.

As a result of their encounters with CAS agencies, many families unjustly end up losing their homes, their life savings, their jobs, their future income, and their dignity in efforts to keep their children from being taken away.

In recent years, there has been escalating concerns about how CAS agencies conduct business and how well their workers are trained.

Testimony and information from document show that:

- Highly unethical practices are being used against parents to intentionally disadvantage them in court matters.
- Most CAS workers in Ontario are not licensed to practice social work in Ontario.
- CAS workers committing perjury in court
- Children in foster care being sexually and physically abused.
